FBI identifies two suspects in Boston Marathon bombing

Reuters

BOSTON Investigators released pictures of two suspects in the Boston Marathon bombing Thursday, seeking the public's help in identifying two backpack-toting men photographed on the crowded sidewalk Monday before bombs exploded near the finish line.

The blasts that killed three people and wounded 176 began a week of security scares that rattled the U.S. and evoked memories of the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks.

"Somebody out there knows these individuals as friends, neighbors, co-workers or family members of the suspects," Richard DesLauriers, the FBI's special agent in charge in Boston, told a news conference. "Though it may be difficult, the nation is counting on those with information to come forward and provide it to us."

DesLauriers warned the public that the men were considered armed and dangerous.

Both men carried backpacks that were believed to contain the bombs. The FBI identified suspect No. 1 as a man wearing a dark baseball cap and sunglasses. Suspect No. 2 wore a white baseball cap backward and was seen setting his backpack on the ground, DesLauriers said.

The FBI released a 30-second video of the two men, one walking behind the other, that edited together three different angles. The video appeared to have been taken from security cameras.

A picture of both men in the same frame was taken at 2:37 p.m., about 13 minutes before the two explosions tore through the crowd that had been cheering on finishers of the race.

Investigators believe the bombs were made from pressure cookers packed with shrapnel. Some of the wounded suffered gruesome injuries and at least 10 people lost limbs as a result of the blasts.

Obama promises: 'You will run again'

Reuters

President Obama sought to bring solace to Boston and the nation Thursday in an interfaith service at a cathedral about a mile from the bomb site, declaring, "You will run again," and vowing to catch whoever was responsible.

He promised resilience in a message directed toward Boston but also to a country on edge.

Obama said the country stood in solidarity with the victims of the Boston bombs on their road to recovery.

"As you begin this long journey of recovery, your city is with you, your commonwealth is with you, your country is with you," Obama said. "We will all be with you as you learn to stand and walk and, yes, run again. Of that, I have no doubt. You will run again."

After his speech, Obama met with volunteers and Boston Marathon organizers, many of whom cared for the injured, and with victims at Massachusetts General Hospital.

Let's make the best of a very bad week

Ernest Wilkins

@ernestwilkins

Dude, what the hell? This week has officially been a double assburger with extra cheese. We've got stuff blowing up in Texas, jag bags harming innocent civilians in Boston, Chicago is half underwater, the Senate apparently is half in the bag when they vote now, Derrick Rose officially didn't play a single minute of the NBA season and Drake dropped the most sensitive rap song since "I Need Love."

I'm not the most religious person in the world, but you have to start looking around and wondering ... is this the end of days?

Well, if it is, I'd like to confess some stuff that has been weighing on me.

» I purchased the Trapt CD the day it came out in 2002.

» I dated a girl once because I felt bad for her.

» When I moved to the suburbs in fourth grade, I lied to a bunch of kids and told them Dominique Wilkins was my uncle. He isn't.

» When I was younger, I whistled and catcalled white women very loudly for about a week because I was pissed about Emmett Till.

» The first time I tried pot, I got so high that I started crying.

» I've faked it.

» More than once.

» I used my friend's butt as a pillow one time.

» That friend was a dude.

A Lisle resident stands in his bare feet during heavy flooding Thursday. ANTONIO PEREZ/TRIBUNE

Limp Bizkit in 2000

» On three separate occasions, I called in to vote for Limp Bizkit's "Nookie" on "Total Request Live."

» My friends and I all were gay for the two-week period between the release of Hanson's "MmmBop" video and the revelation that Taylor Hanson was indeed a boy.

OK, I feel much better now. Everybody be safe out there and be kind to one another. By the way, if you have a confession of your own, tweet it to me. Sharing is caring, right?

MONSTER STORM SLAMS CHICAGO, GENERALLY [BLEEPS] STUFF UP

Reuters

Heavy rains and flooding brought havoc to the Chicago area Thursday, shutting expressways, delaying commuter trains, canceling flights, flooding basements and closing many suburban schools.

The National Weather Service issued flash flood warnings lasting into the evening for the entire area. Between three and seven inches of rain fell throughout the area in the past 24 hours, with more expected, and area rivers continued to rise, according to the weather service.

Flooding shut parts of three major expressways in and out of the city Thursday morning. Many major streets and highway ramps remained blocked Thursday afternoon, and police recommended that people limit travel, if possible, during the evening commute.

Major flooding was affecting parts of Des Plaines, Fox, Illinois and DuPage rivers, according to the weather service. The north branch of the Chicago River already was at levels not seen since the major flooding of September 2008, the service said.

Gov. Quinn declared a state of emergency for Illinois.

Chicago-area residents posted photos on social media of people paddling canoes and rafts along residential streets. The Chicago Department of Water Management was working to control flooding along the river on the Northwest Side, using sandbags and setting up concrete barriers.

"This has been an extraordinary storm," said Tom Powers, the department commissioner.

O'Hare reported 600 flight cancellations Thursday afternoon. Brookfield Zoo, just west of Chicago, closed for only the third time in its 79-year history due to the weather.

Old water main caused giant sinkhole

A sinkhole that swallowed three cars on the Southeast Side and injured one person was caused by an old water main that gave out, Chicago Water Department Commissioner Thomas Powers said Thursday.

The water main in the 9600 block of South Houston Avenue dates from around 1915, Powers said during a briefing on the storm at the Office of Emergency Management and Communications.

"When it broke, it breached the sewer below it," Powers said. "As it undermined, as the water was flowing from the broken main, it undermined all of the soil underneath the pavement and washed it into the sewer."

Witnesses said the hole opened up at about 5 a.m., quickly growing from about 20 feet to about 40 feet. First two cars slid in, then a third as the hole widened, witnesses said. A fourth vehicle was towed from the edge as it was about to fall inside, witnesses said. TRIBUNE

Logan Square theater reaches compromise for weekend concerts

The show will go on.

The Congress Theater, threatened with closure for building code violations, is being allowed to stay open at least through the weekend, according to a court order issued Thursday.

After the city filed a motion last week for a preliminary injunction to shut down the Logan Square theater because of building violations, a last-minute compromise between the city and the Congress Theater has allowed the theater to remain open until at least the next court date, which is scheduled for Tuesday.

"It's a big theater with a lot of issues," city attorney Judy Frydland said in Cook County Circuit Court at the Daley Center.

The theater will not be allowed to sell tickets until at least the next court date and will reduce its first-floor occupancy from approximately 4,500 to 3,000. The second and third floors will remain closed.

Frydland later said city inspectors visited the theater Wednesday and found many issues were addressed, including putting fire extinguishers and carbon monoxide detectors in place and fixing electrical issues.

The theater has agreed to keep an unobstructed path of egress and provide two licensed fire guards at all shows, according to the court order.

"This is the city being concerned about safety," Frydland said outside the court-

The city plans to inspect the theater before the next court appearance. She said the theater's response has improved as time has gone on.

The theater's attorney, Demetris Kare, declined to comment.

Concealed carry bill goes down

Chicago Tribune

SPRINGFIELD The Illinois House on Thursday defeated a concealed weapons proposal favored by gun rights advocates, a setback that could spur negotiations toward finding common ground with lawmakers who back gun control.

The legislation represented a signature showdown in the critical gun debate that is in the spotlight this spring because a federal appeals court has set an early June deadline for Illinois to put in place a concealed weapons law.

Under the proposal, guns could have been carried on mass transit buses and trains but banned from taverns, schools, casinos, stadiums, child-care facilities, universities and government buildings.

North Side Democratic Rep. Kelly Cassidy that contended much more needs to be negotiated to broach the regional divide between hunters' rights and the rights of citizens on the dangerous streets of Chicago.

"The only hunting that's happening in my neighborhood is of young men," Cassidy said.

EXPRESS LINES

- An off-duty police officer pinned down a female officer and touched her inappropriately at a party on the South Side earlier this week. Cook County prosecutors alleged Thursday.
- A fifth doctor has been charged with prescribing narcotics without a license in connection with a wide-ranging investigation of Sacred Heart Hospital on the West Side, authorities told the Tribune on Thursday.
- Northbound CTA Red Line service was being rerouted Thursday afternoon after smoke was spotted on the tracks at the Lake Street stop, officials said. TRIBUNE

Search for blast survivors

7 WEST, Texas Rescuers searched Thursday for survivors in the rubble of homes destroyed by a fiery fertilizer plant explosion in a rural Texas town that the mayor said had killed at least 14 people.

Among the dead are four paramedics killed in the chemical blast at West Fertilizer Co. on Wednesday evening after emergency responders rushed to put out a fire at the plant, West Mayor Tommy Muska said.

He said five volunteer firefighters are listed as missing and feared dead. The cause of the explosion, which injured more than 160 people, was not known and officials said no

"All of that unknown ... is really scary, we don't know what has happened, who is alive, who is hurt, that's probably the worst part now," said Pat Lee, whose 92-year-old

Police initially put the death toll at up to 15, but later Thursday Texas Department of Public Safety spokesman Jason Reyes told reporters that while the explosion had been deadly, it is not yet known exactly how many people had been killed.

Agents with the U.S. Chemical Safety Board, a federal agency that investigates industrial chemical accidents, and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives are on the scene of the blast, which was the strength of a magnitude 2.1 earthquake.

BRAND NEW AMENITIES & UNBEATABLE VIEWS

In praise of low-tech budgeting

YOUNG MONEY

Megan Crepeau

» mcrepeau@tribune.com
» @crepeau

Ever since becoming a Big Fancy Financial Columnist, tons of people have asked me how I keep my budget.

OK, three people have asked me that. But still, I'm never very excited to tell them, because my budget? It's SUPER BORING. And it's low-tech. It's a Google spreadsheet, which is one step above sketching it out on a legal pad (which also is a thing I have done).

But you know what? It absolutely works, and not because I'm particularly disciplined or because I live like a nun. It works because it's intuitive, it forces me to pay attention, and it gives me perspective on the future.

Here's the deal. Start a spreadsheet in Google Drive or Excel. Put today's date in the top left cell. In the next cell, enter the amount of money you have in your checking account. Underneath it, track what comes in and goes out, with the date on one side and the purpose (spending cash, paycheck, food) on the other. Income should be positive and spending should be negative, but you probably guessed that, duh. Every so often, maybe every week? Or after every paycheck? Sum it up. Use the SUM function. You don't even have to do any math for this, guys.

Then, you know, just live your life and fine-tune the numbers as you go along. If you under- or over-spend, fill in the correct numbers and adjust your spreadsheet for the next few weeks accordingly. Experts call this a "rolling budget;" I call it "obvious."

And then just keep going, all the way down, projecting costs and income for as long as you like. Months, even. Mine is filled out through November, because clearly I need better hobbies. But that focus on the future has kept me in line. If I impulse-buy a new dress in April, I can see exactly how that affects my ability to pay for my friend's birthday drinks in August, or a plane ticket home for Christmas. I can't pretend that the dress exists in a vacuum.

More-passive budgeting plans, like Mint, were too easy for me to ignore (no, I'm not proud of this). They do the work for you, and if that works best for you, fantastic! But me, I have to force myself to think about the consequences of how I spend my money. In the end, that's all a budget is supposed to do.

Jordan's former trainer, Tim Grover, told TrueHoop TV that the Bulls superstar ate bad pizza before what came to be known as "the flu game." Which means they need volunteer taste testers now. Anyone?

CLUTCH HAPPENS

FROM 'THE SHOT' TO D-ROSE, NBA PLAYOFFS NEVER CEASE TO AMAZE

By Bryan Crawford

FOR REDEYE

The Bulls are headed to their fifth consecutive postseason—without Derrick Rose, no less—and it's their eighth appearance in the last nine years. Playoff time always has been exciting in Chicago and this year should be no different. So RedEye asked current Bulls about their favorite NBA postseason memories, either watching as a kid or playing in the NBA. As you would expect, Michael Jordan's name came up. A lot.

Daequan Cook

My favorite moment watching the playoffs? Man, Michael Jordan. Game 6 in Utah. What did they call it, "The Shot"? Just to see how he went out, that was amazing.

And my favorite moment as a player was in 2012 with the Oklahoma City Thunder when we played the Dallas Mavericks in the first round. KD [Kevin Durant] hit a game-winner in Game 1—off one leg. It was nice, man.

Jimmy Butler

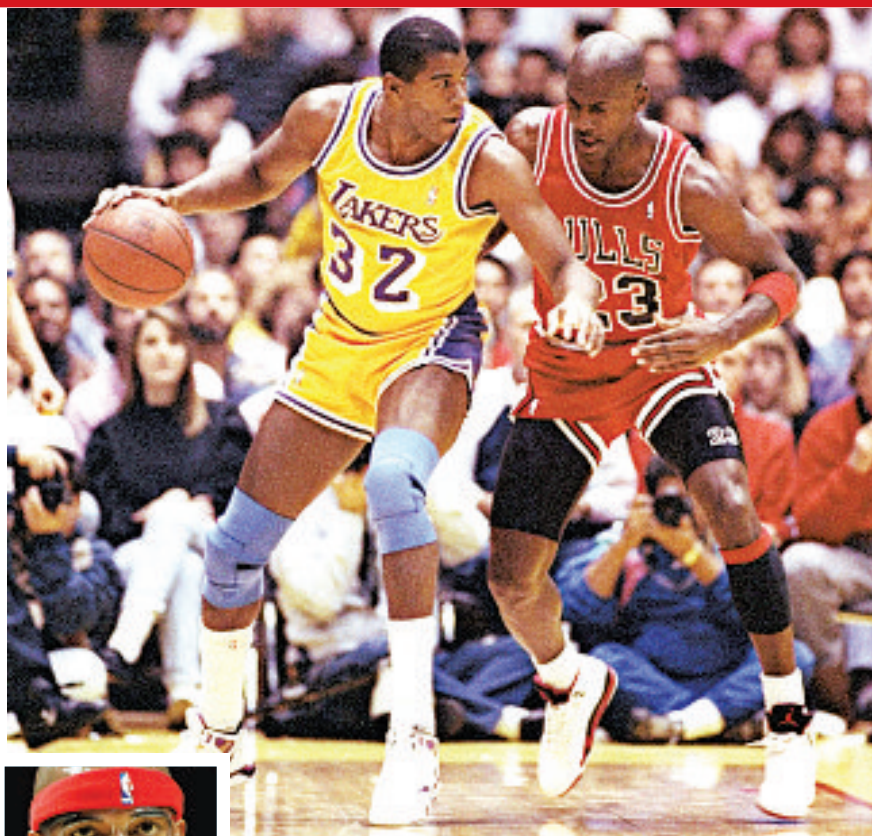

Everybody remembers Mike, man.

That cross-over against Utah; everybody loves that. When you think about Mike you think, "Damn, he did [Bryon Russell] nasty!" As a player, I haven't really played in the playoffs, but hopefully I can make some this year.

NBA FILE

Rip Hamilton

As a player, probably my fondest is winning a championship [in 2004 with Detroit] and beating the Lakers. Nobody thought we were going to win and that whole thing was exciting for me. And watching? Definitely the Bulls with Michael Jordan. When he went up against Magic Johnson [in the 1991 Finals against the L.A. Lakers] and switched the ball in his hands on that one shot. I think about that, and the game where hit all those 3s against Portland [in the 1992 Finals].

Taj Gibson

Watching Michael Jordan crossing over Bryon Russell. When I was younger, I didn't understand that a crossover wasn't a simple play. And as I got older and started watching the NBA more, and then seeing how tough it is to guard people in this league today, I can only imagine how hard it was to guard Michael Jordan back then.

My favorite memory as a player is [when] we were down—it was my second year in the NBA—against Atlanta. It was the second round of the playoffs and a crucial game to go up 3-2. Derrick [Rose] was getting double-teamed and he passed the ball to me on two straight plays. And I don't know what got into me, I made two straight buckets. I was rolling that game in the fourth quarter. I'll remember that for the rest of my life. It was so loud in the UC that game. It's gotta be that as my favorite—or the dunk on D-Wade.

Kirk Hinrich

My favorite playoff memory, probably, is Michael Jordan in the finals in Utah. Just going out like that. For the best player who ever lived to hit a shot like that was just seemed fitting. And as a player, you know, I'm hoping to have more. Right now, the scrapbook's a little limited.

Carlos Boozer

When I was in college, it was crazy how dominant Kobe and Shaq were. That lob that Kobe threw Shaq against Portland and he dunked it and screamed, that was crazy. And MJ, when he hit the shot against Utah and his form was perfect—fundamentally sound. Moments like that stand out in your mind.

TRIBUNE FILE

JORDAN (STILL) RULES

Jordan reigns supreme among two veteran scribes who have covered the NBA for decades.

Sam Smith (Bulls.com)

To me, the most significant one was the Jordan shot against Cleveland. But it was why it was. Jordan had blown the game before [Game 4 in Chicago], a lot of people forget; he missed two free throws. Here you have the guy who's viewed as the greatest player ever missing free throws to clinch the series at home. Now it's going back to Cleveland, and it comes down to one shot. If Jordan misses that shot, I don't know what would have happened to that team. They would've been forced into big changes. That one shot had the biggest ramifications for the direction of the franchise and it was sort of the launching pad from there.

Michael Wilbon (ESPN)

Michael sweeping the Pistons in Detroit and seeing them walk off the floor; I was at all of those games. The game in the Finals against Magic and the Lakers; the one where MJ switched hands on the shot. The game-winner over [Craig] Ehlo. I'll tell you what, my favorite is when the Bulls beat the Knicks in [Madison Square] Garden and Jordan had the baseline dunk on [Patrick] Ewing. That's the one.

We picked the best answers from our Twitter followers. It's that simple. What are you waiting for?

1	Make a prediction for the NBA playoffs.	I predict I won't watch the finals because I only care about the Bulls, and without Derrick Rose ...	Jay-Z has set the trend, and now the Bulls will also drop the Nets.	DOOOOONNNNN'T CARRRRREEEEE! (cc Jay Cutler and Paul M. Banks)	Bulls lose in first round.	@FlintSkinny The Bulls win two series and half of Chicago starts asking which one is Patrick Kane.
2	Convince Derrick Rose to play for the Bulls this postseason.	Honestly, he should wait till next year. In the meantime, he can come play the villain in "Super Troopers 2."	For the love of G-d.	Stop being so selfish. Don't you owe it to Bulls fans to risk your entire career?	Derrick, please. Please. OK? Please?	@JetSetVegas Seven minutes in heaven with the teammate of your choice.
3	Now that the Blackhawks are going to play at Soldier Field let's hope for snow, as that always improved our broom ball games when I was a kid.	... a Chicago team is sure to win there.	... the "five-hole" won't just be describing the Bears' offensive line.	... Bears at Wrigley.	@a1blackhawk ... we can witness actual goal-line defense.
4	Phil Jackson supposedly is "itching" for a comeback. Thoughts?	I only like Phil on the Bulls' sideline. That job is taken, so he should team up with D-Rose in in "Super Troopers 2."	Maybe he just has championship ringworm.	See a doctor; get rid of it.	Great. We'll start looking for teams loaded with Hall of Famers for him to coach.	@VissAndPinegar He got bored writing jibberish on Twitter. He wants to keep himself occupied again.
5	How have the Bears been able to cut down on mental errors?	Tinfoil helmets.	They are thinking with their brains and not their hearts. Lovie stinks.	It's April. If they think mental errors matters now, they're still making them.	Trying to impress the new coaches, I guess.	@KelthMAnderson By making sure Hester is running the right way.

HE WENT WHERE?

Behind the scenes of a game-winning goal

By Jack M Silverstein | FOR REDEYE

With 15 minutes remaining in a 2-1 game against Dallas on Monday, the Blackhawks reclaimed the lead on a goal from Andrew Shaw off a pass from Patrick Kane. RedEye went On The Ice with Shaw, Kane and Bryan Bickell to get the story of what ended up as the deciding goal.

Patrick Kane: I picked up the puck. I was trying to get some speed up the ice. I think it was late in my shift, and that's why Shaw and Bickell came on the ice.

Bryan Bickell: Kane had the speed going into the offensive zone. I just pushed the D [defenseman] back ... and Shawzie came off the bench with some steam.

Andrew Shaw: I saw Marcus Kruger changing on an offensive rush, which is obviously a good thing. You don't want to change on the back check. He came off early there, and I got out there.

Bickell: You want to open the space and draw a couple defensemen when you're going to the net. With Kane's patience he can find the right guy. Even if he has a couple guys on him, he still might find him.

Kane: I'm just trying to create space—for myself, or for Bicks coming to the net, or any one of my teammates trailing late, even if it's a defenseman. For me, it's just read and react.

Shaw: When Kane's got the puck, you let him do his thing. I kind of stayed wide coming into the zone. Kane with his nice hands drew two or three guys to him, and he just kind of fed it to me open.

Bickell: It's a play we run, "middle drive." Kane can go through two or three guys easily. But for some reason he didn't feel like it and found Shawzie on the backdoor.

Kane: The name of the game is to play off your instincts. I didn't really have any set plans, but I saw Shawzie coming late and dropped it to him.

Shaw: He just kind of fed it to me open. I got a quick shot off as the goalie was trying

Emery ailing

Hawks goaltender Ray Emery is out with a lower-body injury and will not play Friday against Nashville, coach Joel Quenneville said Thursday, adding that Emery is "day to day." The Hawks recalled goaltender Carter Hutton from Rockford to replace Emery.

to slide across and went five-hole.

Bickell: He was happy to go five-hole. I think he was trying to go high glove, but somehow he went five-hole.

Kane: He made a nice shot five-hole.

Bickell (to Kane): I don't know if he meant to shoot five-hole, though.

Kane: No? [To Shaw] Bickell said he doesn't think you meant to go five-hole.

Shaw: [Smiles.] I suppose Bick's trying to make fun of me. I don't have the hardest shot, but it always finds a way to get in.

JACK M SILVERSTEIN IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

LUCKY '13 FOR THE BEARS

By Whizzer | FOR REDEYE

This is a great time of year for me. Not so cold that I freeze my paws off, not so hot that I'm sweating through my fur. Also, the Bears schedule is here! Here now, my picks for the 2013 season.

Sept. 8 vs. Cincinnati: W

Sept. 15 vs. Minnesota: W

Sept. 22 at Pittsburgh: L

Sept. 29 at Detroit: L

Oct. 6 vs. New Orleans: W

Oct. 10 vs. N.Y. Giants: L

Oct. 20 at Washington: L

Nov. 4 at Green Bay: L

Nov. 10 vs. Detroit: W

Nov. 17 vs. Baltimore: W

Nov. 24 at St. Louis: W

Dec. 1 at Minnesota: W

Dec. 9 vs. Dallas: W

Dec. 15 at Cleveland: W

Dec. 22 at Philadelphia: W

Dec. 29 vs. Green Bay: L

Record: So the Bears will go 10-6. Not bad. Not great, but not bad. The worst part is they still can't solve Green Bay. The good news is, the playoffs await!

No Baconfest tickets? Calm your cravings with these 10 dishes

HILARY HIGGINS/REDEYE PHOTOS

By Samantha Nelson

FOR REDEYE

Bacon dumplings. Bacon pie. Bacon tacos. Bacon cotton candy. These are just a few of the smoky, salty treats that local chefs plan to serve at Baconfest Chicago this weekend. Unfortunately, the lure of these pork-packed dishes proved so great that the event sold out the same day tickets went on sale. If you're not among the fortunate few who will be stuffing themselves silly at the UIC Forum on Saturday, still you can get your fix. These restaurants are serving the same or similar Baconfest dishes—but for a limited time, so don't wait too long. Find even more options on Baconfest's own Do-It-Yourself Baconfest Guide at baconfestchicago.com

Suckonork at Central Standard

169 W. Kinzie St. 312-527-9463

Price: $12

Order it: Through April 25

This serious sandwich can only be described as pig on pig on ... more pig. Ham, bacon and sausage are rolled up in a piece of suckling pig and served on an onion roll with spicy head cheese, bacon mayo and cabbage marinated in a red wine vinaigrette.

Bacon-cheddar biscuits at Frontier

1072 N. Milwaukee Ave. 773-772-4322

Price: $8

Order it: Friday-Sunday and April 26-28, brunch only

Get a meaty start to your weekend with chef Brian Jupiter's brunch biscuits. Not only are they baked with aged cheddar, chives and bacon in the batter so they develop a seriously smoky flavor while baking, they're also topped with bacon gravy that's loaded with meat, so you're sure to get bacon in every bite.

Sunchoke, bacon and tangerine risotto at Brow trout

4111 N. Lincoln Ave. 773-472-4111

Price: $12-$22

Order it: Friday-April 26

This North Center restaurant took a its vegetarian risotto studded with sunchoke and tangerine and added bacon in honor of the fest—and it will serve the carnivore version at the restaurant in honor of the event through next weekend. Try just a taste with the appetizer portion ($12) or order the entree ($22) to make it a meal.

Bacon zelnicky and bacon dacquoise at Gingersnap Sweets & Such

1416 W. Irving Park Road 773-697-8529

Price: $4-$5

Order it: Sunday-May 5 (while supplies last)

This Lakeview sweets shop is baking bacon into two of its treats. The first is zelnicky—a simple Czech cracker made from flour and sauerkraut that's meant to be eaten with beer, cheese or soup—sold by the bag. For something sweeter, try the dacquoise, a French meringue-based cake featuring layers of peanut butter mousse, caramel, milk chocolate and buttercream served in bar form. "I'd say it's too pretty to eat, but that's not true. I can eat it," manager Stacy VerBurg said. If the bacon dacquoise proves popular, she may keep it on the menu for longer.

Bacon English muffin at Nana

3267 S. Halsted St. 312-929-2486

Price: $4

Order it: Sunday-April 28

If you're looking for this dish—an English muffin with braised pork belly, green tomato jam, scrambled eggs and ancho pepper syrup—on the menu at this Bridgeport restaurant, you won't find it. It's an off-menu special for those in the know, available during daytime hours.

Banh mi burger at Burger Bar

1578 N. Clybourn Ave. 312-255-0055

Price: $16

Order it: Throughout April

Here's a tasty coincidence: This Lincoln Park burger shop's Baconfest dish also happens to be its burger of the month. That means you have two weeks to work up your appetite for a curry-spiced pork patty topped with bacon aioli and traditional banh mi fillings such as pork belly, daikon radish slaw, cilantro and jalapeno.

Bacon bread pudding at Cru Kitchen & Bar

25 E. Delaware Place 312-337-4001

Price: $10

Order it: Sunday-April 28

Cru's entire kitchen staff was involved in designing this dish, which features a traditional bread pudding base topped with bacon caramel and slices of braised bacon. A side of kimchee cuts the rich, creamy taste with both spice and crunch.

BLT at City Tavern

1416 S. Michigan Ave. 312-663-1278

Price: $13

Order it: This spring

At this South Loop bar and restaurant, chef

Robert Hoffman deconstructs the classic sandwich, serving braised pork belly and corn bread croutons with a smoked tomato jam, all topped with applewood-smoked bacon sauce and baked kale chips. The dish is part of the restaurant's spring menu, so expect it to stick around for the next few months.

Black beans and rice at La Sirena Clandestina

954 W. Fulton Market 312-226-5300

Price: $6

Order it: Anytime

When Chef John Manion opened this West Loop spot, his black beans were vegetarian. Then he loaded them with ham and bacon for a dinner with local meat shop The Butcher & Larder and saw the error of his ways. "I was very, very wrong," Manion said. "I'd been doing my customers and staff a huge disservice." His porked-up version is on display at Bacon-fest (minus the rice) and on his restaurant's everyday menu as a side dish for the foreseeable future.

Maple-glazed pineapple and bacon doughnut at Firecakes Donuts

68 W. Hubbard St. 312-329-6500

Price: $2

Order it: Anytime

This sweet-and-salty pastry is the smallest of Firecakes' doughnut offerings—most can devour it in two or three bites—but it packs a big punch of flavor thanks to bacon and pineapple glazed with caramelized maple syrup. They're available daily but have been known to sell out, so the earlier you arrive (the shop opens at 7:30 a.m. on weekdays and 8:30 a.m. on weekends), the better your chances.

Art of Chicken chef inspired by family

Chicago Tribune

For Christian Moreno, the key to opening his first restaurant was sticking to what he knew: the recipes he grew up with and the neighborhood he grew up in.

Inspired by the dinners shared among his Mexican-immigrant family, the 30-year-old lifelong Bucktown resident opened The Art of Chicken, a Latin-infused fast-casual spot at 2041 N. Western Ave., last month.

Styled to resemble a chicken coop, the 20-seat restaurant serves up quarter, half and whole grilled (never fried) chickens in two styles: slathered in a tangy marinade (El Jefe) or seasoned with a blend of spices (Crazy Chico). Craving something outside the poultry variety? Look elsewhere. Other than a small selection of side orders that include Spanish rice, grilled vegetables and fries, chicken is the alpha and the omega of Moreno's recently opened eatery, which he says has been in the works for years.

How long has the idea for this restaurant been percolating?

When I was a little kid, one of my uncles used to work in a restaurant. I'd go on weekends and help him out. That's where this thing got initiated. A lot of family helped me out in opening the restaurant, too. It's family-run and -operated. Everyone who works here is in some way part of the family.

What about the recipes?

Everything is a family recipe. They all come from get-togethers, barbecues in the back yard. Everyone would bring their own food, and the recipes were delicious. I thought I could incorporate them into my restaurant and could make a living off of them. My family — uncles, aunts, cousins — they all provided me with bits of information to come up with the recipes. The menu itself is pretty small — two styles of grilled chicken, a couple of sides to choose from.

Crazy Chico with steamed vegetables and corn on the cob at Art of Chicken
ANTHONY SOUFFLE/TRIBUNE

Why focus exclusively on chicken?

I believe that when you have such a simple menu — very common things that people eat — you can dedicate more quality time to it. You go to these restaurants that give you a three- or four-page menu, and you don't even know what to order because you have so much to read and look at. Here, we have our two different marinades and a few sides. It's very easy to maintain and be consistent with the quality of the food we're serving.

The name doesn't really give a hint to your family heritage. Why "The Art of Chicken"?

There's an artistic wave in the community, and I wanted to incorporate that into the restaurant. I believe that the marinades are art. I know that sounds really cheesy, but I believe it.

Play it cool?

Anna Pulley

redeye@tribune.com
@annapulley

Dear Anna,

I am single and actively dating, and I recently received some advice from male friends that I should make myself less available to the men I date and try playing hard to get. Does this really work? And if so, what are some effective strategies?
—Mouse Seeks Cat

I was all prepared to launch into militant all-caps speech about how honesty is NOT JUST A TEA BRAND, but there is research that suggests playing hard to get does work in some instances.

In a study published in the European Journal of Personality, psychology researchers ran four experiments on hundreds of U.S. college students about playing hard to get and determined that everyone does it, but women do it more than men, and that it can be helpful in landing a mate.

"Women derive more benefit from playing hard-to-get because it allows them to test men out and increase the demand men place on them," said study author Peter Jonason, assistant professor of psychology at the University of Western Sydney in Australia. The study also found that if you're looking for a committed romantic relationship, women tend to want a man with medium availability (not too easy or too hard), and men prefer low availability (aka hard to get). A similar study about speed dating also showed that women who were more selective (hard, but not impossible to get) fared better. And a 1973 study, also done on college students, came to comparable conclusions about how being selective increases your demand.

It should be noted that "playing hard to get" doesn't involve extensive head games or manipulation. The two most common strategies noted in the study were "acting confident" and "talking to others." As another female friend put it, "To me, hard to get is not a game you play—you shouldn't date someone you're not interested in or don't respect—but as a set of subtle reminders that you are valuable, independent and desired."

As for effective strategies of hard-to-get-ness, I reached out to people on social media channels (because my own dating strategy is "hopelessly transparent and available"). Many said you shouldn't rush to return texts or phone calls. Don't ask what night works for them, but simply state a date, and be less bend-over-backward accommodating. The most common suggestion was also the simplest: Actually be busy. Having a life works wonders for your dating life.

Comic Versatility

Stand-up star
Jim Gaffigan adds
'author' to his resume

By Scott Bolohan

FOR REDEYE

When Jim Gaffigan plays the Chicago Theatre this weekend, it will be a homecoming of sorts for the Northwest Indiana native.

His comedy makes no effort to hide his love for the simple things of Midwestern life. He talks openly about his love of food and laziness, which has tuned him into one of the most successful comedians in the business. And then there's the Gaffigan who has lived in New York City since he was 19, been on numerous sitcoms, appeared in a Broadway play and just wrote his first book, "My Dad is Fat," which hits shelves May 7—all while raising five kids.

We talked to him about his Chicago experiences, pizza, and how authors would do as comedians.

It always surprises me you've never lived in Chicago, since it seems like the most Jim Gaffigan-y city in America.

Right. I was born in Barrington and moved to Northwest Indiana. I would say that I've been floating around Chicago. I mean, Northwest Indiana identifies itself as Chicago. I grew up in Chesterton and Munster. There are jokes that I have that I can only really do in Chicago because of the fact I'm from Indiana. I love telling people in Chicago I'm from Northwest Indiana and they say "Where is that?" and I say, "It's 10 minutes away." Northwest Indiana is kind of the stepbrother to Chicago.

You did get to live in fake Chicago on "My Boys."

What was that like?

Filming in fake Chicago is like filming in fake wherever. It's very odd. The thing that is interesting about "My Boys" is how many Chicago people worked on the show. There's such a rich comedy produced from Second City that when they do Second City they're in their early 20s, and they identify Chicago as almost a college campus. It is this romantic college experience for them. So a lot of the writers went to Northwestern or Second City.

STAND-UP AUTHORS?

Many comedians have written books, but few authors attempt stand-up. We asked Jim Gaffigan how he thought some authors would fare as stand-ups. S.B.

MARK TWAIN

He would be great. He ended up basically doing stand-up.

ERNEST HEMINGWAY

He seems like a pretty confident guy. I would imagine he would do all right. He was of an era where he was very much a part of the peer group around him. Confidence would carry him.

CHARLES DICKENS

That guy, I bet he would be an amazing stand-up comic. Again, storytelling. I haven't read a Charles Dickens book in 15 years. But he was pretty amazing. I remember reading "David Copperfield" and thinking, "That was me."

MALCOLM GLADWELL

I really like Malcolm Gladwell. I met him at a Halloween party and I was nervous around him.

What was growing up around the city like?
I grew up going into Chicago and trying to convince my friends to go into Chicago. Then I went to school on the East Coast and moved to New York City. So I'm relatively ignorant about Chicago. I still have the 16-year-old suburbanite perspective on Chicago. My brothers and sisters live or have lived in Chicago. I'm the guy who goes back to Chicago and gets the deep dish pizza and the people who live in Chicago look at me like I'm wearing a Statue of Liberty hat. But I don't care, I love the deep dish pizza.

Do you have a favorite Chicago pizza place?
Lately I've been going to Lou Malnati's, but usually it's whatever is closest to my hotel because I'm exhausted. It depends. But they're everywhere. I'm doing this book tour in May, and I think there's going to be one in Naperville and Winnetka, and the first thought that came to my mind was there is probably a Giordano's there.

Last slice of pizza of your life: New York pizza or Chicago pizza?

Oh, I would say beyond a doubt Chicago pizza. I say that on stage in New York. There is no comparison. I just love the idea of sausage pizza where there is just a whole layer of sausage, a significant layer. I don't stop eating it, either. You eat it until you feel physically uncomfortable. That's how I eat Chicago pizza.

There's also something about the wait involved. It almost feels excruciatingly long. I virtually tackle a waiter. I'm like, "Get me a sausage pizza," and they're like, "OK," and I'm pushing them into the kitchen because I don't want to wait. It takes 45 minutes. I always destroy my mouth on the first bite, burning it. But it is one of those things where I would never eat it during the day and then try to do two shows. I do it late at night when I'm watching Lifetime.

It seems like you've embraced "fat," like you are totally cool with it now.

Being a guy who talks about things where we just want to eat and sleep and things like that, some of that is probably a function of having five kids. I used to eat a lot and work out a lot. But now I don't have time to work out. It's not as if I'm super thin. It's not like I feel comfortable taking my shirt off at the pool anyways. I've got a hot wife, who am I doing it for? It's just a simple pleasure.

Your stuff still plays with younger crowds.
I'm grateful for it. I'm an observational guy at heart. My point of view is very clear. That fits into any age group, whether I'm talking about Victoria's Secret or ice cream, you can understand where I'm coming from. You aren't going to make everyone laugh. There was this thing on Reddit where everyone was mad at my camping jokes, which is ridiculous. As clean as I am, there are going to be people who have a problem.

Did you find writing the book enjoyable in the same way you find stand-up?
I wanted it to be a good book. I did a lot of research on the topic of parenting books. I wanted to make it something that I would enjoy, even the single me when I was 16. ...

Stand-up is all about word economy, but with essays you can't rely on vocal intonation or cadence or facial expression. You have to really paint the picture. My wife and I wrote everything together. And also, I'm an idiot. I didn't want to do the ghostwriter where you sit down and talk to somebody for six hours and then there are books. But I really wanted it to be funny. It very well might be the only book I write, so I want people to look at it and say, "Well, at least his book is funny."

You've done stand-up, TV, movies, Broadway, now a book. Is there anything else you want to tackle?

I'm very lucky to have done the things I have. I never thought I'd do a Broadway play or write a book. But I would love to just keep getting better at stand-up. And not to sound too corny, I just want to be a good father. That's just not something you can suck at and get away with. It's a creative fulfillment thing. It's really fun, it's like heroin, where you are like, "I want to do that again."

SCOTT SOLOHAN IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

STEPHEN KING

He would be an interesting comedian. A very dark, low-energy comedian. He would probably be really big in the nerd scene, like a Stephen Wright. Stephen King would obviously be a storyteller and there is humor in there. I met him once. He's very much a function of his lifestyle. When you sit in a room and write for four or five hours a day, it affects who you are. I feel he's a little bit of a loner, which is what comedians are, except we are sitting in a room alone playing video games.

Natalie Dormer as Margaery Tyrell in 'Game of Thrones'

Natalie Dormer masters the 'Game'

SHOW PATROL

Curt Wagner

» cwagner@tribune.com
» @showpatrol

Margaery Tyrell's family has offered her up as bride for creepy King Joffrey on HBO's "Game of Thrones," but according to actress Natalie Dormer, she's no pawn of Westeros politics.

Dormer, probably most familiar in the U.S. for her role as Anne Boleyn on Showtime's "The Tudors," said that Margaery is different from the child bride in George R.R. Martin's "A Song of Ice and Fire" novels on which the show is based. Under the tutelage of her cunning grandmother Olenna Redwyne, aka the Queen of Thorns (Dame Diana Rigg), Margaery knows exactly what she must do to win over the unpredictable Joffrey (Jack Gleeson).

"She's definitely a player," Dormer told me during a recent phone interview. "The Tyrells are moving into the capital and I think they bring with them a whole new element to the game: Margaery courting public opinion."

"It's an interesting new take on the idea of power and how you assume power," she added, laughing. "It's basically good, old-fashioned PR."

By giving to the poor orphans of King's Landing in Joffrey's name, Margaery has put a much-needed positive spin on the reviled royal family. In private, she's solidifying her place in Joffrey's heart—and on his manipulative mother's (Lena Headey) list of rivals—by stroking the King's ego and playing into his twisted love for death and destruction.

In this Sunday's episode, Margaery takes another bold step by encouraging Joffrey to show himself to the public that has reviled him. "If you give them your love, they will return it a thousand-fold," she tells him. "They adore you."

OK, so that's a lie, but Dormer says Joffrey responds to her attentions. "You can see the beginnings of her changing Joffrey," she said. "Could Joffrey be controlled if he's handled psychologically correctly? The answer to that question is not immediately apparent, but the Tyrells and Margaery are doing the best they can."

Margaery and the Tyrells seem to be winning the game so far, but Dormer teased that might not last.

"She's going to get some nasty shocks, isn't she?" she said with a chuckle. "Who'd really want to have Joffrey lying in bed next to them? Let's be honest."

Roman Godfrey, the wealthy, weird teen played by Bill Skarsgard on "Hemlock Grove," takes the marijuana he sells to fellow students. That might be the key to understanding the 13-episode horror mashup, all of which will be available Friday on Netflix.

The online streaming service's latest foray into original programming, "Hemlock Grove" feels a little like a high gone awry. Set in a Pennsylvania town that isn't as charming as it seems — aren't they all like that, "Twin Peaks" fans? — the series has werewolves, racism, possible vampires, a teen who believes an angel made her pregnant, a mad scientist and, not last nor least, a Hulk of a girl with a mangled face and a bulging, giant ball in place of one of her eyes.

All these crazy folks are haphazardly wrapped together in what seems to be an attempt to duplicate the hypnotic bizarroland of FX's "American Horror Story." But much of the writing here is dreadful; scenes go nowhere while thinly developed characters pop in and out of the action — although there is little action early on. Adapted by 28-year-old Brian McGreevy from his novel and co-executive produced by horror specialist Eli Roth (who directed the first episode), it is mostly a rambling, nonsensical mess.

"There's just so much more happening than what you see," teen Brooke Bluebell says in one of those aimless scenes. (Unless it's to tell viewers they're not watching closely enough?) Not long after, a monster snacks on poor Brooke's lower torso and the story is off and running.

'Hemlock Grove'

"Hemlock Grove" could be perfect for Netflix's brand of binge-viewing; racing through the episodes quickly might help you forget that nothing makes much sense.

Or you can just roll yourself a joint.

"Pixar's 'Wall-E' was pretty good. Imagine how great it would be if it were live action, starred Tom Cruise and unfolded kind of like Duncan Jones' ('Moon,' 'Source Code') directing 'Independence Day!'"

From that hypothetical, misguided theory comes "Oblivion," in which Cruise plays a lone operative named Jack. Much like Wall-E, Jack completes maintenance tasks on a desolate future version of Earth, where he marvels at rare evidence of plant life and sometimes fixates on long-dated cultural material. Good news: Led Zeppelin's "Ramble On" still kicks ass in 2077.

No, Jack doesn't look like he has binoculars for eyes. He looks like Tom Cruise.

Though his bosses wiped his memory, Jack occasionally has visions of the lovely Julia (Olga Kurylenko of "To the Wonder" and "Quantum of Solace"). Could this mystery woman popping up in his mind be more than some stranger glimpsed on the top of the Empire State Building? Can Jack really be the only one tasked with fixing drones and battling enemy "scavs" on an Earth destroyed by a shattered moon, alien invasion and nuclear war? Why isn't he in a better mood aboard his ship, where he works with a fetching colleague (Andrea Riseborough of last week's "Disconnect" and "Welcome to the Punch")? Sheesh, they have a private pool, and skinny dipping is very much permitted despite the lack of lifeguard on duty.

Directed by Joseph Kosinski (the underrated "Tron: Legacy") from a script based on his unpublished graphic novel, "Oblivion" recalls "Futurama" and several big-screen sci-fi touchstones that would spoil the movie to name. "Oblivion" easily and sometimes beautifully fills an IMAX screen. Spaceships and drones (my favorite villain is Drone #166) whoosh; an enormous landscape of engrossing nothingness spreads out to dwarf Cruise, who would be right in claiming that even the Rock would look puny here.

Yet the actors have no chemistry, and the story doesn't reveal anything fresh about humanity. Kosinski also should have worn sleeves if he was going to try stuffing tricks in there—I rarely predict twists, and I called three of 'em. However, I didn't expect a line as unintentionally silly as Riseborough's character asking Jack, "Our job is not to remember, remember?" In space, no one can hear you chuckle.

Ben Affleck and Rachel McAdams in 'To the Wonder'

Roses are red, and this is bad poetry

FAST PAISED

Matt Pais

» mpais@tribune.com
» @mattpais

If “To the Wonder” were a stand-up routine, it’d go something like this: “Didja ever notice how guys are always walking around with their hands in their pockets, saying and expressing nothing? And women are always twirling and letting their emotions get the best of them? Am I right, people?”

Because “To the Wonder” comes from Terrence Malick (“The Tree of Life”), the film communicates this tragic gender gap through minimal dialogue. Hey, why show a man teaching his girlfriend’s daughter the names of wildflowers and calling her “daughter” when you can just have someone say that happened in voiceover?

“To the Wonder” is indeed a voiceover party, and everyone (whose characters’ names are never spoken) is invited: Neil (Ben Affleck) apparently attracts gorgeous women purely on the sensation of his stubble and accomplishes nothing at his job, which requires him just to stroll and ask people if they’re having trouble with their property. Marina (Olga Kurylenko of “Oblivion”) moves with her daughter from France to America to be with Neil, but doesn’t discuss her expiring visa until it’s too late. (That made sense in the naive, collegiate delirium of “Like Crazy,” but in “Wonder” these people should know better.) Rachel McAdams plays Jane, who shares Marina’s fondness for frolicking and spinning and steps in when Neil allows Marina, this supposed love of his life that went south for unaddressed reasons, to leave the country. Javier Bardem plays a priest who voices things like, “Thirsting. We thirst,” when he’s not grumbling about loneliness and sharing generic religious platitudes.

!!! To the Wonder R

Malick incorporates fewer useless shots of the sun shining through the trees than usual (only three!) but, again, characters constantly mosey through tall grass and wind always blows to catch the ladies’ hair just so. Within minutes of the film’s opening, Neil and Marina wander in a small courtyard on the ocean and she says, “We climbed the steps to the wonder.” I mean, it’s a nice courtyard, but they don’t share much of a memory there. A wonder, yes, but the wonder? No way.

Maybe “To the Wonder” intends to meditate on physical attraction and the idea of love obscuring its absence, but Malick writes only feelings, not characters. He gives his women no credit to think clearly. Jane tells Neil that she trusts him and that he makes her laugh when he has done and said nothing. People can be entertained by their partners just being themselves, but neither Jane nor we know Neil well enough for this to work on screen.

The filmmaker captures palpable tension that seeps into the relationships, but he also patronizes small-town America and observes only the beginning and end of love. The middle is what matters, but Malick would rather indulge his lousy poetry like Marina saying, “What is this love that loves us? That comes from nowhere. From all around. The sky. You, cloud. You love me, too.”

That line would get laughed out of a high school classroom. Why should Malick get away with it?

When celebrity illnesses attack

Setting aside whether they should operate at all, TMZ's editors absolutely should not be granted medical licenses. If they were, the world might turn out like the dystopia of "Antiviral," in which celebrity obsession has gone so overboard that average people pay to have celebs' viruses injected into them—a means of achieving "biological communion."

I'm disappointed that this feature debut effort from writer-director Brandon Cronenberg (son of David, director of "Cosmopolis") fails to follow through on its critique of a culture fixated on celebrity skin, from photo leaks to paparazzi-captured up-skirts. Instead, this bizarre sci-fi flick centers on a conspiracy investigation led by Syd (Caleb Landry Jones of "X-Men: First Class"), who gives himself an illness suffered by star Hannah Geist

Caleb Landry Jones in 'Antiviral'

(Sarah Gadon) and discovers it might kill him. If weirdness was all that mattered—people in this society purchase steaks made from the cells of celebrities—"Antiviral" would be a must-see.

Instead, it's merely a wonder to look at from a filmmaker who likely will do better

Like father like son? Brandon Cronenberg

Reuters

Breaking out of a famous parent's shadow can be daunting, but Brandon Cronenberg, son of Canadian filmmaker David Cronenberg, is doing so with his first feature film, "Antiviral."

Opening Friday, "Antiviral" was written and directed by the 33-year-old Cronenberg and satirizes society's obsession with celebrity with a horrific twist: A clinic harvests viruses from sick celebrities and sells the injections to obsessed fans.

Some critics are comparing "Antiviral" to David Cronenberg's early work, which included such classic sci-fi horror films as "Videodrome," "The Fly" and "Dead Ringers."

While Brandon Cronenberg acknowledges the connection, he says some of it "is very legitimate and some of it is kind of overstated."

"My dad has had a very broad, varied career, and it would be very hard for me to make a film that didn't touch on anything that he hasn't touched on," Cronenberg said.

So is David Cronenberg, 70, proud of his son's debut? "Yeah, I think so," said Brandon Cronenberg before breaking in to a laugh. "But he has to say that."

"A Haunted House" may have been childish, crass and homophobic. At least it was focused.

Referencing but rarely commenting on "Paranormal Activity" much like "AHH," "Scary Movie V" also nods to those other recent horror touchstones like, um, "Inception" and "Rise of the Planet of the Apes" and "Black Swan." Current!

Spoofs always break the rule of half-mocking something stale, but I had no idea there was rule about the minimum amount of time that should pass before making a reference. The "Evil Dead" remake came out a week before this film's April 12 release. Yet "Scary Movie V," which comes seven years after "Scary Movie 4" and runs just 70 minutes not including outtakes, features specific references to that ancient film. Hey, if you haven't seen the new "Evil Dead," you could plan a double feature with the comedy acknowledging its existence.

Surprisingly, much of "Scary Movie V" refers to the three-month-old "Mama," with Ashley Tisdale in Jessica Chastain's role as a young woman unprepared to adopt uncivilized kids found in the woods. Her husband Dan (Simon Rex, returning from the series' past two installments but playing a different character) insists on taking in his nieces, who belong to his recently deceased brother Charlie Sheen. What, you've never heard of Dan Sheen?

The real Charlie Sheen appears as himself in an embarrassing prologue with Lindsay Lohan. Presumably Sheen's real-life brother, Emilio Estevez, was unavailable to play Dan, leaving the name Emilio available in the film for Sheen's cat.

Actual cameos include Usher as a dancing janitor and Heather Locklear as the mother of Tisdale's character, who gives birth mid-ballet performance and shoots the baby into a tuba. If you think that's funny, maybe you'll also like the script's constant slut-shaming or the random Madea and Honey Boo Boo impersonators. There's also a Mexican housekeeper presented as fat, smelly, hairy and prone to swinging at a pinata in her sleep.

I did laugh at a scene of a chair humping a microwave. I also like the "SNL" "Technology Hump" sketch, but that's just me. I have no idea who thought the idea of Snoop Dogg/Lion and Mac Miller bantering in the woods would yield awesome comic timing. Especially when they make a joke about how frequently cabins in the woods appear in horror films.

Guys, a really good horror movie just articulated that. It was called "The Cabin in the Woods."
